

The Title of Your Paper Goes Here*

First Author and A. Nother Author

This is a sample document formatted according to the style sheet of the Penn Working Papers in Linguistics. Please make sure to consult our style sheet as well as this document! Do not include your institutional affiliation with your name (you can work it into your address at the end). Do not indent the first line of text after the title or a section heading.

No indentation immediately after the title

Paragraphs that are not immediately after a heading should be indented 0.25 inches. Turn on automatic hyphenation and use directed quotes (turn on “smart quotes” in Word) so your quotes won’t look "like this," but “like this.”

Content words must be capitalized in the title and in all levels of section headings.

1 First Level Heading, in 12pt Bold Times

1.1 Second Level Heading, with a Very Long Title Intended to Demonstrate that the Headings Should Not Be Right-Justified

The body if the text is in 10pt Times.¹ The same font size should be used for examples, legends, etc. (But note that the references should be in 9pt font).

No indentation immediately after section headings

Numbered examples can be formatted like the following sentences. Leave a blank line above and below a block of examples, but do not leave extra space between examples.

- (1) Begin the text of the example at the paragraph indentation, with the number in the margin to its left.
- (2) a. Subexamples may be numbered like this.
 - b. *Do not use a smaller font size for example sentences!

Figures and tables can be “floated” to avoid leaving empty spaces when something does not fit on the remaining space in a page. Table 1 is mentioned here, but appears at the top of the next page. Meanwhile, the text can move on to other things. Any appendices etc. should appear after the text, but before the references. (Use an unnumbered top-level heading).

*You can place acknowledgements in a footnote to the title.

¹Footnotes should be in 9 point Times. Make sure they are justified on both sides, like the main text. (This sentence does not add anything useful, but makes the footnote long enough to make justification visible).

Table 1: Tables and figures should have a left-aligned legend in regular (not bold) 10pt text. (The legend should appear below the table or figure).

Leave two blank lines before the references section
